Kinect: Precise Positioning of the Body, and the Skin Surface. Generating Scalar Fields. Segmentation: Detection of Facial, Anatomical and Other Structures. Therefore the Kinect is not able to look for the space between the finger and the inner part of the fingers without touching the finger. The separation between the skin and the hand occurs when the user puts the fingers of the hand on the device. A detailed explanation can be found in this video by Microsoft. By using the Kinect in a serial or collaborative mode you can make different kinds of measurements, which would be a big challenge with another camera based system. The applications include computer vision, object recognition, and gesture recognition. It is also possible to do 3D scanning of the fingers, although it is not easy to acquire data if the hand is wet.
